CITY OF MEXICO, July 9, 1887. "Tortillas" constitute the most popular oread of the people. These are corn cakes made of water and dough only. The dough s made by soaking the corn in lime water until the hull comes off; then the corn is ground by hand with a rolling-pin on a flat rock. The cake is patted out by hand and baked over charcoal fires, after which dinnor is ready, as many of the poor people eat little else. For variety the tortilla is sprinkled over with ground green pepper, clabber cheese, salt, chopped lettuce, potaoes and some fruit; then rolled up and

Steam Flooring & Planing Mill fried in lard and then we have "enchiladas," a popular delicacy of the people. Next a small loaf of broad is cut in two and each side is sprinkled with salt, pepper, vinegar, olive oil, cheese, fruit and vegetables; then we have "tarta compuesta" for a feast. Next corn meal dough mixed with meat, red pepper, salt, oil and other condiments, and the whole boiled in corn shucks; then we have "tamales," the dumpling of the country. Hashed meat, served in a thick red-pepper stew, is served up as "chile-con carne." The

The first time we took this it gave us vivid recollections of our first of April candy-cayenne-pepper pills; but in time the stranger learns to go, it like a "greaser." Chile-relleno is made by filling a large red pepper pod with cheese and vegetable hash and wrapping the whole in a coat of flour dough. They are cooked as dumnlings and eaten fruits, cheese and the whole highly seasoned with vinegar, spice, salt and castor or olive

"Mole de guajolote" is roast turkey served in thick red pepper sauce, with a top dressing of olive oil, mixed with mince-meat and mustard. This is found in the five and ten-dollar dinners of Mexico. "Cabrito" is a young kid that is killed be-fore it is old enough to eat grass. The hide and feet are taken off and it is roasted whole with all its internal organs, and is so served and eaten at the table. While traveling in the State of Nueva Leon, we received the honor of being an in-vited guest to a select dinner where a numer of State officials were present. The cabrito was one of the many dishes on the table, and it fell on us to do the carving thus we are enabled to give our readers the benefit of our first lesson in the comparative anetomy of a kid after it is cooked. The bigotes are the desserts, and consists of frijoles (beans), coffee, chocolate, tropical fruits, with lime juice, sliced pineapple with sugar, banana and pulque, with stewed

The popular drinks are pulque, the juice of the century plant, in either a sweet or fermented state. It is also mixed with the juice of the pineapple, the crange, the lime and the wild tuna (cacus fruit). All kinds of drinks, especially the pulque is handled in goat skin bags and often in leather bottles, and in sections of entrails tied at the ends as sausage. Orchata is the product of ground watermelon seed soaked in water, with sugar and lime juice to suit the taste. After standing a few hours it is strained off We have just put in operation apparatus of the and is ready for use, and sells at from one pineapple and the tuna, with ice cream and soda water are in use every day in the year. These are the chief drinks of the people, and by many are considered wholesome.
There are many strong drinks which the Mexicans, as a nation, use to excess. The water is bad, and in the hot lands is unfit for use before being boiled and filtered. Thus, the stranger soon learns to take coffee and chocolate in place of water; yet to be deprived of clear, cool water, and be compelled to eat the hashes of the city ho-tels and the country jacals, and ab-tain from fruits because of fevers, is enough at times to make the life of an American almost miserable. But for him who has the happy faculty of adapting himself to his surroundings, there will be in store always more sunshine than shadow. And Mexico is not an exception to the rule.
